

Jacob Jackson

Director of Research Partnerships, California Education Lab

Jacob Jackson is the Director of Research Partnerships at the California Education Lab. He supports strategic partnerships with key education leaders, institutions, and foundations who provide funding for the Lab's research initiatives. He also researches student success and education policies across the educational pipeline. Jacob received a Ph.D. in Education from University of California, Davis. Before his career in research, Jacob was a middle school and high school mathematics teacher.